Vascular, inflammatory, and metabolic factors associated with cognition in aging persons with chronic epilepsy

Bruce P. Hermann, Mark A. Sager, Rebecca L. Koscik, Kate Young, and Keith Nakamura

doi: 10.1111/epi.13891; Published online: 4 September 2017

We examined cognition in aging persons with chronic epilepsy, characterized targeted vascular (systolic/diastolic blood pressure, body mass index [BMI], total and HDL cholesterol, homocysteine), inflammatory (high sensitivity c-reactive protein [hs-CRP], interleukin-6 [IL-6]), and metabolic (insulin resistance (HOMA-IR), glucose) risk factors; and examined their association with cognition.

Participants included 40 persons with chronic localization-related epilepsy and 152 controls, aged 54.6 and 55.3. Participants with epilepsy exhibited generalized cognitive impairment; abnormalities in BMI, hs-CRP, HOMA-IR and fasting glucose; with significant relationships between cognition and HOMA-IR, hs-CRP BMI, and HDL. Aging persons with epilepsy exhibit abnormalities in modifiable risk factors associated with abnormal cognition.

Brivaracetam does not modulate ionotropic channels activated by glutamate, γ -aminobutyric acid, and glycine in hippocampal neurons

doi: 10.1111/epi.13890; Published online: 29 August 2017

Brivaracetam (BRV) is a novel anti-epileptic drug approved as adjunctive treatment for drug refractory partial-onset seizures. BRV contrasts LEV by displaying a higher affinity and distinct interaction with the SV2A protein. This study investigated the effects of BRV on inhibitory and excitatory ionotropic receptors in central hippocampal neurons using voltage-clamp experiments. BRV (up to 100 μ M) did not directly modulate GABA-A-, glycine-, kainate-, NMDA- and AMPA-gated currents but was shown to resemble LEV by opposing the action of negative modulators on inhibitory receptors.
